Independent schools challenge inaccurate fee portrayal

The Independent Schools Council of Australia (ISCA) cautions parents about glossy marketing campaigns for education focused financial products that misrepresent the cost of Independent school fees. While ISCA supports using sensible strategies to help provide for their children's schooling, parents should note that school fee estimates quoted in the marketing material of these products do not reflect the majority of Independent schools.

For example, education contribution fund provider Australian Scholarships Group (ASG) has this week suggested the total national average cost of metropolitan non-government schooling (K-Yr 12) for a child born in 2017 would be close to half a million dollars.

ISCA Executive Director Colette Colman said that "while ASG admit their school fee figures 'represent the upper ranges that parents can reasonably expect to pay,' they neglect to show just how small a proportion of Australia's Independent schools are actually charging the kind of fees that could contribute to those sort of cumulative costs."

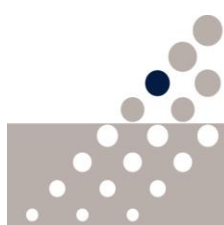

"ASG's fee estimates state that the 2017 national metropolitan upper-range figure parents could expect to pay in secondary school fees is $20,898 per annum", she said. "However, our data shows that in 2015 the median Australian metropolitan Independent school fee was $6,079 per annum. Nationally, nearly three quarters of metropolitan Independent schools are charging below $10,000 per annum."

Ms Colman went on to say that "fees in Independent schools vary greatly, with the majority of them much more affordable than modelling like ASG's suggests. In addition, there are numerous ways parents can save on costs; with many Independent schools offering scholarships, all-inclusive fees, and discounts for siblings or lump sum payments. We would strongly urge parents to do their own research on the fees of schools that interest them."

Ms Colman also pointed out that many schools across the country are currently absorbing some cost increases and holding fee increases to a minimum due to the economic climate.

ISCA's school fee information is derived from data of fees collected from all Australian Independent schools in 2015 (the most recent year for which accurate data is available), and reflects the great diversity that can be found across schools and between states and territories.

ASG state their school fee estimates have been derived from a combination of 2013 and 2015 surveys of their parent members (and CPI adjusted to 2016), which asked them to estimate various costs that they paid for their children's schooling. They state these are a guide only and do not guarantee that they will represent actual costs.

³ Median denotes the dollar value lying at the midpoint of the range of fees charged.
